A Person You Should Know....

Jim has been a member of Independence Center since it opened in 1989. Initially he was hospitalized several times for severe depression, but has been able to stay off of medication for a number of years now.

Jim is an active participant in the life of the Center, serving as co-head of the birthday and anniversary committee and co-head of the political advocacy committee, which sends out letters to politicians regarding mental health issues.

He contributes to the weekly newspaper by writing introductory interviews with new staff members and submitting movie reviews. He buys food for the snack bar and works there three times a week. He also helps with the Saturday social program, cooking and serving food.

Jim credits his participation at Independence Center for his recovery. "I was very lonely before coming here," he says. "Now I have many more friends and feel much more confident. I enjoy doing all the things to help with the programs here. It makes me feel useful."
